The city council and their adherents argue Measure B-17 is not needed because the Rental Inspection ordinance is “dead and gone.” But the council can undo its repeal next week. Voter repeal is permanent.

To paraphrase “Miracle Max” from the “The Princess Bride,” the city council’s rental inspection ordinance “is only MOSTLY dead.”

Barely secret is council’s desire to breathe new life into the ordinance’s registration and license fees, with hugely increased fines for innocent things like replacing your water heater without a permit when you wake Saturday morning with no hot shower. Without B-17, fees and fines will be passed on to raise rents.

Unless we vote yes on Measure B-17, a future city council can bring back all of its invasive provisions. City management wrote the inspection ordinance, and remain to push it through again to pad salaries.

Voting yes makes more affordable rental housing. Current affordable housing programs impose a “fee” on developers for the city’s low-income building fund, unless developers create low cost units. Mobile home rent control prevents trailer park owner greed. Neither discriminates AGAINST folks by age, income, disability, gender, race, ethnicity, sexual identity, or status as a renter or homeowner!

Discrimination pits one group against another. The city council’s death grip on their “privilege” to discriminate shows voters that Measure B-17 is overdue to assure equal dignity in housing regardless of age, income, disability, gender, race, ethnicity, sexual identity, or status as a renter or homeowner.

Yes on Measure B-17 ends housing discrimination.
